

Job Description

This form summarises the purpose of the job and lists its key tasks. It is not a definitive list of all the tasks to be undertaken as those can be varied from time to time at the discretion of the School, in consultation with the postholder.

Job title: Research Officer in Health Policy

Department/Centre/Institute: LSE Health

Accountable to: Professor Elias Mossialos

Job Summary

This WHO funded role will involve carrying out a systematic review which aims to isolate the economic benefits of different investments in primary health care and primary care services. The successful applicant will join the WHO Economic Taskforce on Primary Health Care which is a multidisciplinary team made up of approximately 20 academics who are involved in economics and health services research. The role will involve several meetings in Copenhagen, and the opportunity to present research at policy forums for the WHO and associated partners. Following the systematic review, there will be additional task such as writing policy briefs and undertaking comparative country case studies of primary health care systems.
